

How You Can Help

There are many ways to help Jackie achieve his dream of providing an education for each and every child. Adults can encourage children to earn money and then help them to send their donations to Jackie.

Here are some ways that kids and adults have raised money:

- Making handicrafts and selling them at local fairs and festivals
- Asking for donations to the charity in place of birthday gifts
- Playing music on a street corner
- Asking for people to pledge money for an activity such as tennis serves, bicycle rides, or exercise goals
- Scout troops, classmates, or friends make donation drawings

In Jackie's own words:
"The most important thing is not how much you give, but that you give from your heart. Thank you for supporting my Build a School for a Dollar project and the Dragon's Heart Foundation. I promise to use every penny that's donated to help the children and I will keep every single drawing that is sent to me and display them in the future for everyone to see."

Jackie Chan's Build a School

For a Dollar

About the Dragon's Heart Foundation and the Build a School for a Dollar Project

In 2004, Jackie founded the Dragon's Heart Foundation, a charity which funds the building of schools and provides aid to the needy in poor and remote areas of China. Since 2004, Jackie has personally visited many of these areas to bring his love and support to poor children, the handicapped, and the elderly. Dragon's Heart raises money from charity auctions and private donations, and so far has built over twenty schools, daycare centers, and elderly facilities in China. Recently the Foundation has begun rebuilding schools destroyed in the Sichuan earthquake.

In August of 2006 Jackie announced on his official website a fun and meaningful way for kids to raise money for his charity: the Build a School for a Dollar project. Jackie encouraged children to donate their own money and learn the true spirit of giving. As an added incentive, he will match each donation dollar for dollar. Since the project began, Jackie has received money from children all over the world and although most donate one dollar, some send much more. Adults have also gotten involved, helping raise money in a variety of ways. As of October 2008, Jackie's fans have donated over US $50,000, mostly in small amounts. With Jackie's matching donation, enough money has been raised to build one Dragon's Heart School and soon there will be enough for a second.

The Dragon's Heart Foundation is a registered charity and every dollar goes directly into the fund. All donations are welcome, no matter how big or small.

Build a School
For a Dollar

The Idea:

Children were asked to take a dollar of their own money and tape it onto a piece of drawing paper. The dollar bill would become the main building of the school, and their job was to "build a school" around that dollar using crayons or paint. Here are two examples of donation drawings sent by Jackie's young fans:

As the Build a School project progressed, Jackie's fans used many creative ways to raise money for the charity. Children asked their parents and teachers to help them, and more people became involved. The Build a School for a Dollar project became a global event and little by little the fund grew until the goal was reached in less than two years. Jackie has decided to continue the project to raise money to build as many schools as possible.

Throughout the course of the project, Jackie has shown his sincere appreciation by regularly posting photos of himself with the donations onto his official website at www.jackiechan.com.
